3. Discussion and questions

4

10 Common Grant Writing Mistakes

5

#10 No Statistics or Data

- Artists must tell their story, by indicating results
- Numbers of albums sold, exhibitions, productions
- Data which indicates the demand or interest in your art
- Statistics should speak to your artistic practice and your work (avoid broad statements)

6

#9 Submitting Late Applications

- A very frequent issue (happens to everyone)
- Oftentimes, systems crash at the last minute
- Fill out online applications in advance, and press submit as early as possible
- Always save a copy, before pressing submit
- When in doubt, reach out!

7

#8 Not Utilizing Attachments

- As an artist, your work needs to be seen, heard, and experienced
- Many applicants often leave this blank
- Use every attachment available!
- Ideas: Testimonials, photos (add captions), newspaper clippings, awards, features, interviews, brief videos

8

#7 Underselling Your Work

- Show history or track record of past success
- Provide specific examples of past works, descriptions
- Include statistics without judgement
- Don't hold back - this is the moment to brag about your accomplishments!

9

#6 Not Expressing Urgency

- Particularly key during the post-Covid economy
- Indicate any significant challenge – create urgency!
- Use persuasive language, such as:
 - This grant is essential because...
 - This funding will enable me to immediately....
 - Without this grant, my artistic practice will...
- Urgency helps funders prioritize!

10

#5 Starting from Scratch

Tip: keep a folder of the following key documents:

- Annual budget – what will it cost to operate this year?
- Strategic pitches – all past grant applications
- Common attachments – images of your work with descriptions, your bio, team member bios, list of records/ productions/ works produced

#4 No Commitment to Long-Term Projects

- It's often clear when a project has been invented to win the grant
- Instead, stick to your artistic practice, style and area of focus
- Long-term work will often receive more interest and investment from funders – it's a relationship

#3 Spelling and Grammar Mistakes

- Can be frustrating for grant reviewers
- Makes the application harder to read, reduces success
- Consider authoring proposals in Microsoft Word or Google Docs, then copy and paste content
- All proposals should be thoroughly reviewed

13

#2 Using Too Much Jargon

- Write so that reviewers get it!
- Using complex language or many acronyms can make it difficult to understand
- Focus on using the funder's language and key words
- Tip: Have a friend or family member read your proposal

14

#1 Not Answering the Question!

- Very frustrating for funders
- Re-read your responses, even aloud
- Ask yourself: did I answer the question?
- Avoid vague statements or unnecessary statistics
- Try to include the answer to the question in the first sentence
